How to Write a Position Paper

Writing a position paper is one of the first challenges of participating in a Model UN Conference, and one that many new delegates find daunting. However, if you follow these directions, you will find that writing a position paper is a useful way to organize your thoughts and prepare for the conference.

A position paper is 1 to 2 pages long at most, and its purpose is to serve as a clear and concise reference for your country's position on the agendas at hand. A well written paper will include a brief introduction, a comprehensive fact-based synopsis of the country's position, and suggestions for a resolution.

Elements of a Good Position Paper

A well written position paper has three important elements:

1. Clear and concise language. The primary use of your position paper is to serve as a succinct but comprehensive reference for yourself and fellow delegates. It must be easy to read.
2. Thorough overview of your country's stance. What has been your country's historical stance on the agenda? How do these issues affect your country, and what are your country's policies?
3. A statement of what your country proposes for the resolution. Given your country's position on the agendas, what does it propose for the resolution? A clearly organized outline of your country's goals will help you during the conference.

Form and Format

Organization is crucial for distilling the complicated issue of the agenda into about one-and-a-half pages. While it may be simpler to think of your position paper as an essay, perfect wording and flowery prose is not required -it is much more useful to include important facts, quotes, and statistics. You will want to reference your position paper during speeches and debates -try to keep it simple and easy to scan. Simple and concise paragraphs will be more helpful than overly dense writing. While relevant and informative statistics are crucial elements of a position paper, graphs and charts should not be included. Your position paper should be sent as an attachment in .doc, .docx, or .pdf format to pp@kmun.net. The subject line should include your name, name of your committee, and country (ex. Hong Gildong -UNDP-ROK).

Things to Remember

*Send the Position Paper by January 10, Thursday, 11:59PM (KST) to positionpaper@kmun.net

*Any plagiarism will result in an automatic zero for the entire paper.

*Graphs and charts are not allowed; the pertinent information should be paraphrased.

*The only file formats accepted are .doc, .docx, and .pdf. .Hwp is not accepted.

*The file name should be in the format of "Hong Gil-dong -UNDP-ROK".
